If we are correct in our analysis, however, the need for rethinking mission has never been more critical or more opportune. Before proceeding, we recommend prayerful reflection upon the following scriptural passages. While in no way exhaustive, it offers an outline of the full gospel story of creation, fall, Israel, Jesus, the church, and restoration that frames the ideas in this paper.

With these distinctions and working definition in mind, we then move to a summary consideration of how contemporary globalization is transforming the context of mission. We also consider ways in which the church itself has been a globalizing force and raise questions about how the church might confront its past and present contribution to global processes for good and for ill.
